

An Index to Publications in the English Language Pertaining to Aerotriangulation in Space*

COMPILED BY GORDON GRACIE,
Asst. Professor of Civil Engineering,
Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.

PART of the photogrammetric research that has been done at the University of Illinois during the past few years has involved the systematic compilation of an index to publications on aerotriangulation. Currently, more than 700 titles are filed in this Index, some 400 of them being in the English language. These English language publications are listed here.

The Index does not pertain to radial triangulation, but only to aerotriangulation in space, both analog and analytical. As complete an index as possible has been striven for, although it is recognized that absolute completeness for such an undertaking is virtually impossible. In this regard, the compiler would greatly appreciate any significant omissions being brought to his attention.

Because aerotriangulation is such an integral part of photogrammetry, it is impossible to draw any distinct line between those articles which pertain to aerotriangulation and those which do not. Indeed, there are several border-line cases, particularly in such subject areas as camera orientation in flight, photogrammetric equipment for triangulation, relative and absolute orientation of photographs, and errors in the fundamental photogrammetric operations. Only those articles which, in the opinion of the compiler, have direct significance in aerotriangulation have been listed.

The index is prepared in alphabetical order according to author. Where authorship of an article is by more than one person, the article is listed only under the name of the first author cited in the publication.
